

AN EXCEPTIONAL ARTHUR BRETT GOTHIC REVIVAL BURR OAK INLAY CENTRE TABLE

SKU: GD1551

A Gothic revival Oak Centre Table of exceptional quality by cabinet makers Arthur Brett. This handcrafted British made piece exudes opulence, the carved detailing is crisp and perfectly weighted. Made from solid oak, it boasts a burr oak inlay surface with beautifully straight grain darker inlay to the edge. Standing on one central fluted column leg with four splayed legs on pedestal feet.

A notable piece of furniture by renowned maker and a piece that will last for centuries. It is presented in excellent order, some small fading and wear to the top but hardly noticeable and adds authenticity to this remarkable piece.

About the maker:

Arthur Brett's roots in furniture date back five generations as far as the early 19th century with chairmaker John Brett, born in Norfolk in 1815. In 1870, his son Jonathan T. Brett founded the company making and selling furniture with his six sons. One of them, Arthur, an antique dealer, gradually expanded into reproductions, setting up as Arthur Brett in the 1920s with elegant showrooms in St Giles Street, Norwich. The company's experience in restoring priceless antiques gave Arthur and his team of craftsmen the expertise to create authentic and museum-standard reproductions. This tradition of quality and craftsmanship continues to the present day. Over the years, the firm has established its reputation for making the finest English furniture, with its committed teams of craftsmen, most of whom have served the firm for decades. They have passed down to successive generations the traditional skills and techniques of which any 18th-century cabinet maker would be proud. With this wealth of history and experience, Arthur Brett can offer the finest handcrafted bespoke furniture for 21st-century living. Arthur Brett and Arthur Brett Architectural, now make up part of a family of superb traditional furniture brands that represent the best of English fine furniture-making; gracing the finest homes, financial institutions, hotels and Royal residences internationally.
